

L.E. Froom

to

Walter R. Martin

May 23, 1968.

[excerpt]

I am interested in your general reaction to the little item on the Deity of Christ. In accordance with your invitation, when I have worked out certain other ones on the Incarnation, the Trinity, the personality of the Holy Spirit, and so forth, I will remember you with these as they are perfected.

Because of our former conversations over these great themes, and because of the fact that in recent decades these have not been issues with us, we have had no particular literature thereon. This has, I suppose, given occasion for misunderstanding, or at least to wondering why. We have simply taken them for granted. It is well to spell them out.

[excerpt]